Young Faculty Speaks

Dr. Prateek Gupta
Professor (MBA)

KIET School of Management, Delhi-NCR

Are we qualified or educated?

The 4th goal of the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) focuses on quality education to ensure inclusive and equitable quality education and promoting lifelong learning opportunities for all. This is also highlighted in the National Education Policy 2020. Acquiring knowledge and using it for the welfare of society really makes a person educated. It is the key to prosperity and opens a world of opportunities, making it possible for each of us to contribute to a progressive, healthy society.

Qualification is a certification that makes a person eligible for a job in a particular field or industry. A person's qualification is enough to convey his competency or level of expertise in a particular subject.

Qualifications are necessary for most industries these days though there are still jobs where experience and labour dominate qualifications. In this system, there are no degrees or curriculum, but the knowledge gained can be immensely helpful in life. Education makes all the difference in the quality of life of an individual they say, and this is something that needs no certification.

Qualification is something that can be faked, bought, and sold. A person can be qualified if he cheats in the examinations to pass the paper. Qualification is needed for jobs at every level but mere qualifications do not assure that the person will be able to do his job diligently. Education is something that every person who needs it must strive for. In the long run, it is the education and not qualification that matters. Qualification can get you a job but not respect.

Have we asked these questions to ourselves “Am I serving my organization, my society, and the nation or just taking advantage of my qualification for my personal development?”

Now, meditate, ruminate, and ask yourself today only, “Am I qualified or educated?”
