Subject: CAREER Anchors & Self Concept

To: <navinr...@iitd.ac.in>

Cc: <navinr...@iitd.ac.in>

Dear students

Hope that all of you are doing well and progressing.

Understanding the role of "Internships, Job Shadowing, Informational Interviews" in the journey of career is extremely important as these provide us with the relevant practical exposure that helps us in making informed decisions about our own career. Understanding these experiences helps us get a more realistic picture of ourselves & assists us in discerning what's really important to us. Our self-concept becomes clear with the manifestation of a vital ability, quality, skill, an important need, & a crucial value that influences our orientation. When we undergo these experiences, we are in a position to better understand how any given talent, motive, or value relates to an objective hierarchy to other elements of our personality. The insight thus developed comes as forward towards making more rational career choices. The dominant elements governing these choices can be called our "career anchors". After gaining the experience, individuals develop a better image of the sorts of things that are good at & the sorts of things they need to avoid as they are not good at them. Our career anchors are generally formed around the following dominant themes -

- 1) Security, stability, & organizational identity - these individuals need to organize their career in such a way that future events are predictable & they can rely on the knowledge that they have made it. (Although this mindset may not like a setback in today's rapidly evolving world). These individuals often seek jobs in organizations that provide job tenure, which have a reputation of minimum lay-off, which offer good retirement plans & generous benefits and hold an image of strength & reliability in their industry. Government & civil service jobs appeal to such people and they have a feeling of self-justification even if they are working at a low profile.
- 2) Autonomy & independence - these individuals need to do things in their own way, at their own pace, & set their own standards thereby pursuing careers on their own. This feeling of being the "master of your own ship" is normally inculcated either through the education a training they have received or the nurturing they have got in their formative years. In many kinds of work, the targets & deadlines are set by the method of operation & in such are left to the employee - and this provides for the required sense of autonomy (e.g., management, consulting, & teaching jobs).
- 3) Creativity & entrepreneurship - these individuals need to create a new organization or develop a new business around a product or service which they may or may not have invented themselves. Most such people spend only a few years of their careers in traditional organizations before they break-out on their own, or they remain in organizational jobs as a kind of side-line while pursuing their entrepreneurial activity in their own time. To be successful in entrepreneurial activity needs an overriding pre-occupation, for some people even as obsession, with creating something of their own & proving to the world that they have done it.
- 4) Technical/functional competence - these individuals need to get into those areas of work wherein they have a strong talent & high motivation. They hold their sense of identity around the content of their work, the technical/functional area in which they are excelling, & develop increasing skill in that area, becoming the masters/renown of the craft whose ambition is to become a better & better, his craft and if heavily involved in other tasks they tend to gravitate back to their specialized domain. The criteria they use is the opportunity to continue to do challenging work in their domain.

It is the technically/ functionally anchored individual who is the most vulnerable to career mismanagement because most organizational careers are designed by generalists who put a high value on learning several functions & learning management per se and they are the largest group in any organization or field.

- 5) Managerial Competence - these individuals need to discover in their career path that they want to become general managers, climb the corporate ladder, take on high responsibility, contribute to the welfare of their organization, assume leadership positions, & gain high-income - these are the dual driving values. They need to develop effectiveness in three major areas - analytical competence, interpersonal competence, and emotional competence.

In all oriented students can assist us for a detailed discussion & understanding on the first floor of the IITD Building.

With best wishes for a rewarding career ahead.

Responsibility of your CAREER Unread 10 of 10/10

Career Counselling Center - Unread Tue, Mar 7, 4:44 PM

Dear Students

Hope that you must be doing well and enjoying life!

Ultimately, developing your career is your own responsibility. Increasing research of companies & of individuals in managerial, technical, & professional careers point towards the fact that the best kind of career management, both from both poles of views starts with career self management. No matter how meticulously any employer plans for its employees in today's technologically & socially evolving world, the chances of career mismanagement are minimal unless the employee herself/himself is actively involved.

Different individuals develop different 'career anchors' which have quite different consequences, both for the individual's management of herself/himself and for the organization's planning of reward, incentive, and control systems. Studies on career evolution have shown that as individuals move into their career, they gradually develop a clearer self-concept in terms of their -

- i) abilities & talents: what they are good at & what they are not good at
- ii) values & needs: what they seek for in their career (e.g., a good income, security, interesting & creative work, etc.), and
- iii) values: what kind of company, work environment, product, service, etc. they would want to be linked with.

When individuals first enter the world of work they have many ambitions, hopes, & fears but little information about themselves, especially about their abilities & talents. Through testing & counselling they can get an idea of their strengths & values, but they cannot really determine what they will be good at & how they will really like doing certain kinds of work. In every occupation that has ever been studied, researchers have found what has come to be known as 'reality-check' - the finding that the actual world of work is not at all what the person had imagined it to be during her/his educational/training period. Not only are the tasks different than expected - more boring, less rational, more fraught with interpersonal & political issues, etc., but the person discovers her/his own preferences, limitations, skills, needs, and values to be different than expected.

One of the most important parts of the early learning in a new job, therefore, is the learning about oneself and to take you on this path of self-discovery the CAREER COUNSELLING CENTRE offers a mix of psychometric tests -

- MBTI for personality assessment
- RIASEC for identifying career interests
- Skills inventory
- Values inventory

So, if confused come to or second half of the day on all working days after duty taking permission from your parent department!

With best wishes

An individual who is an exploratory learner who would like to help people/community in general by trying out new ideas/methods in an organised manner. Isn't afraid of taking challenges as opportunities and takes ownership of her decisions while working in/leading teams and this helps her in establishing healthy workplace relationships with minimal conflicts as she believes in veracity. Her drive to complete any given task inspires her to do more, but setting priorities is a little problematic.

An individual who likes doing things methodically for which the instructions should be closely stated to reach the desired outcome(s). A flexible work schedule may not work for her but she prefers a stable job with a regular income where she is valued for her contribution. She likes/would like to assist people in situations that she can fathom but maybe a little hesitant in an unknown situation. She gets well with like-minded people and works well in unison rather than lead them. Although, she would like to be the one in authority her habit of holding herself back in various situations isn't allowing her to reach her true potential.

She is a person who is a little challenged when it comes to organizing her priorities, but when it comes to facing challenges she has the ability to explore, learn, & apply her learning to solve them. She is a courageous individual who owns her decisions that's why is able to build and maintain healthy relationships in teams. Seeing her present inclination, she should opt for Mathematics, Psychology, Graphics, Sociology, & English as her ideal subjects

Final discussion on 27th Dec '22, he agreed to complete his B.Tech rather than go for the exams like SSC-JE and I have given him an option to do some courses/certifications on Data Science/Analysis // Business Analytics, etc as he is interested in working with data and ~~and~~ handling Machines/Equipment - so have suggested him IoT related specialization as well.

ENTP/ENFP → are knowledgeable (open (learning), have a flexible approach but discard conventional thinking & tend to find out the best choice after careful deliberation. They use reasoning to such a extent that they may appear to be insensitive to others & may become argumentative to prove their point; in the process they may become intolerant of others ideas. Sometimes their flexibility causes them to lose focus & makes them turn towards abstract concepts

When inspired by something they can show their caring & considerate nature.

They don't like being 'disliked' so they may become 'people pleasers' and start compromising/accommodating

Outwardly they may be enthusiastic &
